Landmark case ruling could eliminate 'legal haze' over companies' right to object to foreign buyout bids (The Advertiser, Adelaide, South Australia, February 23, 2018) Transparency of the country's takeover laws could be downgraded if the Federal Court rules in favour of a bid to privatise the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC). The proceedings are the most likely outcome of an appeal by ASIC commissioner Greg Medcraft, who has been fighting the government's plan to sell the watchdog, and the case is now locked in a legal haze.

Documents relating to the case were released on Friday and, if the appeal succeeds, will pave the way for ASIC to be sold by China's Anbang Insurance, which made a $US3 billion offer late last year. "It will make governments very nervous," Chris Murphy, a founder of the Shareholders Alliance, told The Advertiser in an interview on Friday. "The idea of these proceeds of sale going to a foreign shareholder is something that will make shareholders consider their position very carefully." Mr Murphy said the prospect of the appeal succeeding could be a game changer, and that it would force the government to reconsider its approach to takeovers. It follows a ruling by a federal judge this week that it is unconstitutional for foreigners to buy Australian government assets. The Australian Securities and Investments Commission argued the federal court could not block the transaction under the constitution, and the government has begun to appeal that decision, which could be finalised as soon as mid-June. "We think it will be overturned," Mr Murphy said. "If this judgment goes in favour of ASIC, then it will take us back to the days when ASIC was one of the agencies in the ACLEI, and there was a legal haze around their ability to be bought by foreign investors." The ACLEI was established in 2001 to provide an independent advice service for owners of companies listed on the Australian Securities
